I have reviewed the website and app called the TorahApp and met with its developer. I am satisfied that this tool contains Torah material that can serve as great assistance to anyone learning Torah. The texts and translations conform to traditional Orthodox understandings, written by believing, G-d-fearing Jews throughout the generations. The TorahApp contains many features that allow users to quickly find commentaries and navigate between texts, whether while studying alone or listening to a shiur. This is a very powerful tool to enhance Torah learning. I merely caution that a student should always prefer the Hebrew or Aramaic text over any other language. Translations should be used as a supplement, a secondary reference to help you understand the Hebrew or Aramaic. In this way, the TorahApp will help you not only learn Torah but also learn textual skills.

The TorahApp also contains siddurim. I encourage people who pray with electronic devices to turn off notifications during prayer times, to avoid distractions.

May the TorahApp be a source of Torah and tefillah for thousands of people.

I add an expiration date to this recommendation because this is a live tool that can change over time. If anyone finds objectionable material on the TorahApp, please contact me at the email address below.

I include a copy of this letter on the RAA website to confirm its validity
